BRUNO BANI GEOMETRIC DIS-HARMONY

The exhibition's itinerary traces diverse moments of the artist's creative pursuit, which, since the beginning has combined the geometric rigour of forms with the creative dynamism of colour. Bani gives life to a continuous interplay of harmonious functions between matter and perception, which occurs with the presence of a copper wire that runs through the canvas, the only element free from formal rules.

Thus in the series "Moon" and "Harmony" the squares and circles appear clearly recognisable to the visitor's eye yet remain suspended precisely in the encounter with the wire that crosses them. They are crystallised in the instant in which they were about to become the "other." In the same way, in the recent series of works 'Untitled' it is the square element overlaid on the circular one that breaks the rigour of the creation of the basic shapes inscribed in the square. The union of simple elements is pursued until reaching a complex and unitary representation. This is a distinctive trait of Bruno Bani's work. Indeed, as art critic Roberto Sottile wrote about Bani's work, "you want to touch the works of art to understand how the artist managed to shape matter and subjugate it to the rules of stability and harmony."
